EPWORTH LEAGUE CONVENTION.

The second day meeting opened with a sunrise prayer meeting at 6:30 o'clock, continuing until regular devotional services at 8:30. Organization and appointment of committees at 9:30. Committee on permanent organization reported the following:

President, W. J. Martindale.
First vice-president, A. Hatley.
Second vice-president, F. V. Russell.
Third vice-president, Carrie Thomas.
Fourth vice-president, J. T. Crews.
Fifth vice-president, Nellie Hayes.
Secretary, A. G. Phillips.
Treasurer, James Allison.

An auditing committee was appointed consisting of the following persons: Addie Dixon, Larned; Leona Griffith, Newton; C. H. McMillan, Wichita; J. W. Paul, Winfield; Lizzie Spencer and Dr. N. H. Phillips.

Reports of leagues were next in order, followed by a paper by Prof. A. Gridley of Winfield on "The League as a Training School." Next came a paper on "The Open Door," by Rev. J. E. Eup, D.D., of El Dorado.

On motion this paper was ordered published in the Western Methodist.

In the afternoon a paper was read by Rev. E. A. Hoyt of Arkansas City, entitled "The Epworth League—What is It? And Why Is It?"

This contained many excellent points. The next paper, "The Study of the Bible in the League," by Miss Maud Price—was another excellent paper. It was read by a young lady friend from Wellington, Miss Price not being present.

The synposium, "The Impress of the Holy Spirit in League work," was led by Rev. A. O. Elvright of Winfield in an interesting paper. Several other delegates followed on the same subject.

The piano solo: Miss Maggie Woody was well rendered.

This was followed by question box and Christian work department, and a four-minute evening session.

An interesting song and praise service was led by Rev. C. S. Nussbaum. This was followed by instrumental music on the piano by Grace Thompson (10 years old). She is a beautiful little girl and fingers the keys like one who had made it a practice for years. Truly some children are born with a knowledge of music.

Fern Dorsey's recitation was another evidence of juvenile precocity. Her gestures were as graceful and much cuter than an older person's could have been.

The vocal solo by Miss Nellie McPherson was an inspiration. Miss McPherson has a fine, full, sweet voice and speaks her words so distinctly that she stands at the front as one of Wichita's sweetest and most interesting singers. And, in consideration of the many noted vocalists of this city, this is saying a great deal. But a distinct rendering of the beautiful words of either hymn or song is what most pleases an intelligent audience.

Next followed the address of Rev. Edwin A. Shell, general secretary of the Epworth League, which was one of the most eloquent addresses ever delivered. This, too, was an inspiration, and gave evidence that some men are not only born eloquent, but that knowledge is born in them. But, in the language of the speaker, he has not only traveled forty-eight times as fast as he could travel, but he has had the opportunity to learn as much in one year as his grandfather had in forty-eight years. He also spoke eloquently of the power of the press and of the exalted opportunities of the modern printer, but the most eloquent words appeared cold and dead in print when compared to the living inspiration of eloquence. Rev. Mr. Shell came down a note of ancestry, and has written a book on the "Representatives of the Fourth Generation of the American Race."

He forcibly admits that the young men of the present have "one gate open that was never open to another generation." He also says: "The Anglo-Saxon race and the Almighty God are marching hand in hand."

POLICE COURT.

Judge Babb played to a full house yesterday morning at 10 o'clock, and last night at midnight there were twenty-two occupants of the bench.

Henry Johnson, indicted, and for this assault on him he was fined $5. His case was continued until 4 p. m. today.

Ed Johnson was run in by the police a long time ago, but in a thoughtful moment he lit out, and from that day the officers have had an eye out for him. Ed evidently thought the boys had forgotten him, because he came back. But he was now in a different way. A state case will be made of it.

T. J. Hotchkiss was drunk, and for being in that forbidden state he was fined $5.

Joe Crawley, drunk, had his case continued till this morning, and Joe Jones was served in the afternoon.

Ruby Drake was held for petty larceny, and will have a hearing this morning.

J. T. Thompson is back again. Six weeks ago J. T. served out a thirty days sentence and was released. He was one two days and was run in again. He served a ten-days sentence for drunkenness and was allowed to depart. He was his own boss for two days and last night he showed up again, too full for recognition. J. T. is a dandy.

Robert Clark will have a hearing this morning on a charge of burglary; state case.

When O'Neill is locked up for being drunk. The Rock Island was pulling into the depot last night. Ted jumped on the platform of the moving train and grabbed an overcoat from a man standing there. Teddy jumped off into Jim Austin's arms. That officer tenderly bore him to the bastle, where he languishes. He will have a hearing this a. m.

Thomas Osborn, an all-around man, was run in. He had been offering extra inducements for persons to buy brass rings and other desirable jewelry. Thomas will appear before his Honor this morning in the star character of "Injured Innocence."

Mr. Peters and Mr. Riley were the names given by two gentlemen who asked for lodging. They were accommodated.

Frank and Mrs. Blackburn of South Ida avenue were blessed yesterday with another fine baby boy, whom Frank has already named Benjamin Butler Blackburn. The young gentleman arrived in time to celebrate the glorious victory of the Republican ticket. The baby and mother are doing well and Frank is being congratulated on all sides by his friends.

L. S. Nafziger, president of the Fourth National bank, has been confined to his home for the past week on account of sickness.

Professor Pence, principal of the Lincoln school, yesterday evening demonstrated to his scholars the workings of an election as the poll tax system. Judges and clerks were appointed, and all the forms of an election duly performed. The scholars walked up and deposited their ballots with as much interest as if it was a real election.

Mr. Jack Snidells, so well and favorably known to many of the musical people of this city, is visiting a few of his friends for a few days.

Another of those charming socials at the A. O. U. W. hall last night was enjoyed by twenty couples till midnight. They report a happy time.

Miss Louise Van Fleet, who has been the guest of her sister, Mrs. Thomas M. Smith, and family, on the corner of Hillside avenue and Harry street, will return to her home in Fort Wayne, Ind., on Monday next.

CLEVELAND'S NEW HOME.

The Original Part of Woodley Built Years Ago.

A Rural Retreat for the President—The Site That Washington Selected for the White House—Other Great Men Have Lived There Before.

(Copyright, 1893.)

An old-fashioned domestic way President Cleveland and his little family have moved out to their country home to spend the autumnal days. At this time, when the whole country is convulsed with a question of the greatest moment, it may prove restful to all to take a peep at the beautiful retreat where the man who controls the welfare of sixty millions of people seeks quiet and domestic felicity.

Woodley, for that is its name, given presumably from the densely wooded land upon which the mansion is built, has a history second in interest to none in the District of Columbia, wherein romantic and patriotic sentiments are charmingly blended. The original part of the mansion was built one hundred years ago and the grounds then covered an area of one hundred and one acres. And back in those colonial days stately dames and princely courtiers held grand levees there, for in those days they flirted and danced, laughed and made merry, and joyous echoes floated back from woodland and dell.

Gen. George Washington, standing upon the steps of the old manor house and viewing the surroundings, said: "Here is the spot where the capital should be built." The finest view of the city is from the rear part of the house, and as the sun's slanting rays fall upon the steeples and spires they glitter and dance in merry gambol over the thousands of housetops in the vicinity of "magnificent distances."

Woodley, too, was the site selected by Gen. Winfield Scott for the soldiers' home, but owing to some misunderstanding with the owner it could not be purchased. Its value seems not to have diminished with the passing years, for quite recently the commission appointed to select ground for a new naval observatory had it in consideration, but some scientific member interposed an objection and suggested the "Harbor" place in preference.

It was rebuilt in 1800 by John Plater or Philip Barton Key, I am not quite positive which, as they were brothers-in-law and owned the property jointly. Francis Scott Key, the father of Philip Barton, spent most of his boyhood days at Woodley and his name may be seen cut on the panes of glass in the window of the front hall. It seems suggestive and real that as he drank in the inspiring scene his loyal heart burst forth in grand and patriotic ardor and upon the balmy breeze unfurled the "Star Spangled Banner," the words and melody of which awaken the fires of freedom in every loyal breast.

As John Howard Payne touched the heart of every wanderer with his song of "Home Sweet Home," making it a living, breathing thing, so the "Star Spangled Banner."

"With the rocket's red glare And the bombs bursting in air, I saw the great flag that waved o'er our heads, and I long to see floating over it the stately emblem as a tribute to the author."

Another distinguished resident at Woodley was Baron Gerhardt, the German minister at Washington, who made his home there during the Mexican war.

Mr. Cleveland is not the first president who has found a happy retreat at Woodley.

Mrs. Clara E. Clark, President, The German Ladies Independent Aid society will meet in regular monthly session at the home of Mrs. J. E. Knobel at 2 o'clock, to which all members are requested to come.

Mrs. W. E. Hittmann, Secretary.

A Simple Mouth Wash.
After the teeth have been cleaned "secundum artem," writes an English physician, a very simple and efficient mouth wash will be found in water reddened with the permanganate of potash. A bottle containing a strong solution of this may be kept in the dressing room and a little added to the tumbler full of water we mean to use. This permanganate is a useful disinfectant in many ways. Such a wash sweetens the breath, too—that is, if the mischief arises from the teeth. Foul breath is a terrible affliction, and as it may sometimes point to diseases of a dangerous character if a mouth wash does not remove it, a medical man should be consulted.—N. Y. Post.

Driven.
The wanderer assented. In the violet calm of evening he stood at the back door of the humble cot. His trousers frayed at the bottom and his coat had known the touch of the bull dog. "Yes, madam," he said, "I was driven to it by fate. The lady in the green apron with the yellow spots in the corner looked sympathetic. 'With—' Retrospectively he gazed into space as he spoke. '—all the train robberies and railroad accidents there's nothing to do but walk if you want to be on the safe side.' She vouchsafed him a slab of apple with further comment.—Detroit Tribune.

An Eye to Improved Methods.
Father (to the seven-year-old miss beside him, cutting the whip sharply through the air)—See, Mary, how I make the horse go faster without striking him at all.

Mary (in an eager tone of happy discovery)—Papa, why don't you spank us children in that way?—Life.

Even here the cares of office sometimes invade and he is prepared to meet the emergency. To the rear of the president's office is the dining-room, spacious and elegant, and with a capacity for accommodating a great many guests, for while the Cleverlands are happy in their quiet domestic life, their hospitality is superlative in its breadth. The butler's pantry is to the left of the dining-room, and that important individual finds especial delight there because of its complete equipment.

Back of the butler's pantry is the conservatory—no house is complete without one, and Mrs. Cleveland's love of flowers makes it a most attractive spot to her. There are plants of domestic origin and, mingling their leaves with neighboring and rare exotics, they seem to breathe in their fragrance until they, too, are redolent with rich perfume.

At the end of the hall, directly in the center, is a large living-room, and to its right is the drawing-room. A broad piazza extends across the rear of the house and, in the closing hours of these glorious October afternoons, when official cares may be laid aside, the president and his family gather there and watch the antics and frolics of little Ruth as she tumbles and runs over the lawn.

An old-time stairway with spindle rails leads to the second floor, where a wide hall runs the full length of the house. On the right are linen-rooms, fitted especially for the good housekeeper. Four large, airy chambers and the nursery complete this story. The third is a duplicate of the second, minus the nursery, and, in all, the mansion contains twenty great rooms whose high ceilings and perfect sanitary conditions make it a Mecca of health. It is, too, an abode where comfort reigns supreme.

Such is the disposition of the apartments and thus far may curious eyes go and no farther. The personal appearance belongs to the privacy of a home where delicate stands guard and where only the ill-bred and morbidly inquisitive would seek to enter unbidden. Such rude invasion, making it in a way a public property, would rob it of its individuality and charm. Mrs. Cleveland's refined taste, perfect in its simplicity, is a matter of record. It would not require a supreme effort of the imagination to picture the relic of colonial days rendered beautiful and homelike under the skillful direction of its gentle mistress. The general public must be content with the assurance that it is an ideal haven of rest.

At the old manor house the fair first lady has a retreat where, from time to time, she may escape from the exactions of social life and, untrammelled by conventionalities, may refresh herself in the full enjoyment of domestic life.

The president, returning there after the trial of a busy day, may find that he has a quiet and loving husband and father, for Woodley is not an executive mansion. It is home, sweet home.

HOUSE BUILT OF SEA SHELLS.
The ruins of some very strange habitations are to be found all over Arizona. The most of them are built of adobe or concrete, which is plentiful, and the only thing that cannot be explained is who were their builders. But there is one ruin in the Huachuca mountains which is a mystery. It is two hundred miles from the ocean, and around it on all sides are rocks and hills of sand. There is no water for miles, nor even the suggestion of it, and yet the house is built of sea shells, laid in cement. It is hardly likely that the builder of the house would have carried his material across the desert, when there were rocks at hand that would have served his purpose, and the question is—where did the shells come from? There are a dozen varieties of them in the walls, and one over the door is of extraordinary size. The house has room inside it for five or six persons.

A Timely Warning.
"I'm going to turn over a new leaf," remarked a very selfish man to an acquaintance.

"How?"

"I've joined the church and I'm going to love my neighbor as myself, as the good book commands us to do."

The acquaintance put his hand on his shoulder.

"Well, go at it gradually," he said. "If you go at it suddenly, you'll smother him with affection in the first five minutes."—Detroit Free Press.

Cause and Effect.
The debate had been growing more and more heated for the last half hour, when the major, stung by some unusually pointed remark, drew himself up to his full height and said with some severity:

"Allow me to remind you, colonel, that it doesn't cost anything to be a gentleman."

"Certainly not, certainly not," replied the colonel affably, "you're a gentleman, a perfect gentleman."—Detroit Tribune.

Why? Why is Strictly Pure White Lead?

Because it will outlast all other paints; give a handsomer finish, better protection to the wood, and the first cost will be less. If Barries and other adulterants of white lead are "just as good" as Strictly Pure White Lead, why are all the adulterated white leads always branded Pure, or

"Strictly Pure White Lead?"
This Barries is a heavy white powder (ground stone), having the appearance of white lead, worthless as a paint, costing only about a cent a pound, and is only used to cheapen the mixture. What shoddy is to cloth, Barries is to paint. Be careful to use only old and standard brands of white lead.

"Southern" "Collier" "Red Seal" are strictly pure, "Old Dutch" process brands, established by a lifetime use. For colors use National Lead Co.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors with Strictly Pure White Lead.

Croup is a terror to young mothers. To post them concerning the first symptoms, and treatment is the object of this item. The first indication of croup is hoarseness. If Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is given as soon as the child becomes hoarse, or even after the rough cough has appeared it will prevent the attack.
